

Education Color Palettes

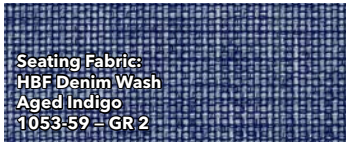

Out of the Blue

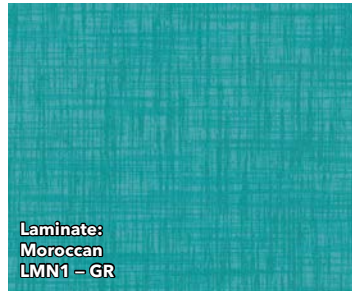

Blue is the ideal color for learning spaces. According to color psychology, blue promotes memory, enhances creativity, and fosters productivity. And certain hues—think cerulean and azure—instantly invoke a sense of calm, making it perfect for quiet rooms.

Teal of Approval

Composed of calming shades of blue and green, teal has a remarkable effect on how students absorb and focus. While blue encourages communication and clarity, green helps students decompress and realign. Combined, they offer calm, cool, and collected energy to any busy learning space.

Recess & Recharge

Non-traditional classrooms often take a “think-outside-the-box” approach to learning. Often comprised of a variety of textures, colors, and configurations, these spaces are designed to support a wide variety of learning levels and teaching styles. Color is especially effective when it comes to defining spaces, encouraging connection, and inspiring creativity.

Play Ball

It's hard not to feel positive when you see an unexpected pop of orange. An instant mood lifter, orange creates a warm, welcoming environment and encourages energy and vitality in neutral spaces.

Field Day

Green has long been known to center the mind—this serene color encourages serenity and supports mental health and concentration. A peaceful, organic hue, green relaxes the senses and creates an aura of calm in the classroom.

Sharp Minds

Learning isn't one dimensional, especially when it comes to non-traditional classrooms. Keeping a variety of students comfortable, connected, and creative in the same space can be a challenge. That's why color is so imperative to create dimension, focus, and inclusivity so that students can let their imaginations take flight.
